LETTIE MALONE.

My story opens, as the novelists ay, in the suburbs of a flourishing little city, in one of the finest section of Kentucky. It is in the early spring and nature has just adorned herself with garments of green. Sitting be neath a spreading oak, in the yard of a Fennale Academy, is a beautiful young girl holding a book in her hand. Here and there, seated in lit-book in her hap upon the lovely aftermy story opens, she was thinking of tar different subjects than to morrow's lessons She was a lovely girl Her eyes were of a lustrous brown. almost black, while her hair was of a raven hue.
